

CICR

Regional approaches to international humanitarian law / Richard Burchill

Document type:	Article
Title:	Regional approaches to international humanitarian law
Author zone:	Richard Burchill
Host item entries:	Victoria University of Wellington law review,
Languages:	English
General Note:	Photocopies
Abstract:	Violations of international humanitarian law (IHL) are a global concern. The enforcement of IHL has traditionally focused on the State level. As States have shown an unwillingness or inability to address violations, attention has moved to the international level primarily through universal approaches such as the International Criminal Court. However, experience has demonstrated that universal approaches also have their limitations. This article argues that regional arrangements offer the possibility of strengthening the enforcement of IHL. As regional arrangements occupy a distinct space between particular local conditions and the universalising tendencies of the global system, they are well placed to handle the various concerns and considerations surrounding the enforcement of IHL.
Authors:	Burchill, Richard
Keyword in English:	IMPLEMENTATION REGIONAL ORGANIZATION
Keyword in French:	MISE EN OEUVRE ORGANISATION REGIONALE
Go to:	Global and regional perspectives on international humanitarian law / Kelisiana Thynne... [et al.]

Call number	Disposability / Due date
345.24/42	See main document