

CICR

Self-interest of self-inflicted : how the United States charges its service members for violating the laws of war / Christopher Jenks

Document type:	Chapter
Title:	Self-interest of self-inflicted : how the United States charges its service members for violating the laws of war
Author zone:	Christopher Jenks
In:	Military self-interest in accountability for core international crimes
Editor:	Brussels : Torkel Opsahl Academic EPublisher, 2015
Physical description:	p. 261-293 : fac-sim.
Languages:	English
	Shorter version also published in : Military justice in the modern age / ed. by Alison Duxbury, Matthew Groves
Abstract:	In this chapter, Christopher Jenks highlights the disparity in charges for similar violations of the laws of war committed by US service members and enemy belligerents. He explains the incentives behind such charging practice and poses the important question as to whether narrowing the accountability gap and increasing transparency may better serve the military's interest.
Authors:	Jenks, Christopher
Keyword in English:	UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES VIOLATION IHL (INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW) MILITARY CRIMINAL LAW WAR CRIME
Keyword in French:	ETATS-UNIS FORCES ARMEES VIOLATION DIH DROIT PENAL MILITAIRE CRIME DE GUERRE
Go to:	Military self-interest in accountability for core international crimes / Morten Bergsmo and Song Tianying (ed.)

Call number	Disposability / Due date
345.29/225	See main document