Abstract:	The international law on reparation for victims of armed conflict is complex. Numerous subfields of international law are involved and reparation-related questions are often highly politically charged. Against this backdrop, the collection of short essays explores whether and under which circumstances individuals have a right to reparation under international law. The introduction unpacks the legal dimensions and identifies the currently most controversial issues. One set of essays then analyses, from different angles, whether a right to reparation for individuals exists as a matter of law. Another set recounts experiences with the implementation of reparation mechanisms and discusses the challenges. A third group of essays addresses the role of domestic courts. The essays ('impulses') are one outcome of the Max Planck Dialogue workshop on reparation for victims of armed conflict, held in 2017 in Berlin.
